Just as there is a growing national need for CTE teachers, there is also a national shortage of CTE administrative leaders. Many states addressed the issue by enabling those with a variety of administrative certifications to be eligible to administer specialized CTE programs and/or CTE schools. On the surface, this seems like a logical decision. After all, a school is a school, right?

ACTE and NOCTI are pleased to announce the first installment of a series that is focused on CTE administrative leadership, including key information on the fundamental skills needed for a CTE administrator to be successful. It is targeted to those individuals who have accepted responsibility for leadership of a school focused on preparing students for technically demanding careers.

While this book focuses on surviving during those first few months, it is a tool that can be used for CTE administrators at all levels of experience and includes topics that hinge on analyzing existing programs and policies with the goal of developing a vision for your school's long-term success! Join this session to take a deep-dive into this new resource with a closer review of content and real-world examples from over 30 seasoned CTE administrators representing 23 states
